NEWS

We celebrate many important days and causes in the month of November: Veteran's Day, World Kindness Day, America Recycles Day, and, of course, Thanksgiving. But, did you know that November is also Native American Heritage Month? Since 1990, November has been set aside to honor the achievements of the native tribes of America and to celebrate the rich and diverse cultures, traditions, and histories of them. November was chosen as it is the end of the traditional harvest season and a time of thanksgiving and celebration for Native Americans. It is also vitally important to raise awareness and learn about the challenges native people have faced in the past, as well as present day, due to the long-term impact of colonialism. To honor Native American Heritage Month, learn about the local history of your area and the traditions of the native tribes and indigenous people who lived there pre-colonization. Celebrate Native American artwork and artisans by visiting a local gallery or museum. Read a book by an indigenous author to celebrate the voices of Native Americans and their stories.
